archaeoacoustics focuses on the role of sound in human behaviour from earliest times up to the development of mechanical detection and recording devices in the 19th century recent calls for an archaeology of the senses have served as a timely even overdue reminder that the past which we experience and which others have experienced before us is multisensory drawing not only upon the primary field of vision but also on touch smell and hearing megalithic tombs palaeolithic painted caves romanesque churches and prehistoric rock shelters all present specific sound qualities which offer clues as to how they may have been designed and used voices resonate external noises are subdued or eliminated and a special aural dimension is accessed which complements the evidence of our other senses the present volume arising from a conference held at the mcdonald institute in 2003 brings together archaeologists and specialists in early musical instruments and acoustics in an attempt to unlock some of the meaning latent in the acoustics of such early structures and spaces it will be essential reading for all who are concerned to seek a broader understanding of human sensory experience from prehistory up to historical times this volume makes a distinction between modern nigerian art music which evolved in the twentieth century and emphasizes western music notation and the previously existing art music tradition in nigeria before the advent of missionaries in the nineteenth century specifically this research examines the social political and cultural factors involved in the evolution and practice of art music in nigeria
